RICHMOND CLASSICAL INSTITUTE.

We take this opportunity of announcing to the public, who may feel interested in the great cause of general education, that the examination of the students of said Institute will take place on Tuesday, 23d of September next, Also, that on Wednesday, the day following, there will be an exhibition by the same, consisting of original and select orations, with several choice dialogues. In connection with which a literary address is expected from Rev. Kenny, of Wheeling; and all to be cheered by the Carrolton band. Come one—come all.

Further:—The Board of the above mentioned Institution would avail themselves of the present occasion to present its claims to the public. Although the Institution has been in successful operation almost two years, averaging thirty students each session, yet its rightful demands for liberal patronage has never been laid fully before the public.

As it was somewhat an experiment, and laboring under some inconveniences in relation to an edifice, we deemed it heretofore inexpedient to labor much for its celebrity. But now we feel fully warranted, from its past success and present advantages, in saying much in its behalf.

Through the liberality of a generous public we have this summer erected a splendid edifice, sufficient to accommodate one hundred students. It stands on an eminence adjoining town, having a fine prospect of all the adjoining country; and consequently, the Poet, the Painter, the Astronomer, and indeed, every votary of science will find it a desirable place.

Richmond must be regarded as possessing as many, if not more advantages for a College, than any other town in all the Western country. The morality of the place is nowhere excelled; the manner and deportment of the citizens are such, that the students who have been called by duty to leave, have generally left with reluctance. And, in fine, its health and religious advantages are such as are worthy of being sought. The facilities of access are numerous; and when the student is here, boarding tuition and general expenses are low. Good boarding, $1.00 and $1.25 per week. Tuition, for English department, $5.00 per session, of 5 months; for higher branches $8.00 per session. We have two Professors—one of Languages and Moral Sciences, the other of Mathematics and Natural Sciences—both of whom are well qualified for their respective duties, and to give full satisfaction to the students. A literary society is connected with the Institution, in which young men may make great improvement.

Our next session will commence on the first Monday of November next. The attention of every young man who desires a cheap and profound education is invited to this Institution.

JOHN COOK, Pres't.
W. Lorimer, Sec. of Board.
